"The Shopping Center"

Miller & Rhoads

How Like, Yet How Unlike
This, Must Have Been the Easter-time of Seventy Years Ago!

We're accustomed to think, as we watch the beautiful new-old fashions of to-day, how potent a likeness there must be to the fashion displays of our grandmothers' time. The flares—the panniers—the hoops—the bodices—everywhere are the beautifully quaint touches that breathe into to-day the thought and spirit of the forties. And yet—

When mother's mother set about preparing her wardrobe for the brilliant day that marks the great divide between the new and the old in the year's fashions, how different it all was!

To find just the garments she wanted, the fashions of her dreams, required a search that lasted through many days. Fashion news did not flash from city to city, from continent to continent, in a moment. There were no style magazines, as the word is known to-day. No stores then to bring into her very home the creations of the world's masters of fashion—

No "Miller & Rhoads" then.

The best, the newest offerings of all the world of style are laid before the eyes of the woman of to-day. The hats, the costumes, the footwear, the gloves—these and countless other details make up the dazzling pre-Easter display that enables her to crowd all her preparation for the day of days into a few short hours. The season of Easter buying has grown wonderfully short.

The busy time is reaching its height now, however. There are just two more shopping weeks to Easter.

MILLER & RHOADS.
